Poly crisis and the need to transform reality

by Faruq

One thing stands out clearly in this crisis-torn world of ours. It is the need to transform reality. Even the ruling classes that seek to turn us against one another like this are realising this truth.

The point of contention, say, of life and death, is whether this is to be done from above and thus preserve the class nature of society, though that signify a retrospec- tion, a movement backward that may enthrall the destruc- tion of humankind itself.

Or whether this is to be achieved from below, with working people taking destiny into their own hands, there- by allowing a dialectical relationship of subject and object to emanate from within the historic movement forward. Such a transformation of reality would mean that the con- crete totality of all the challenges that face our age bursts forth into a new human dimension, and, therefore, a new social order? —Raya Dunayevskaya, 1963

Introduction

Society’s cries for radical transformation makes itself felt day after day, from rising attacks on Trans people, Jews, Asians, Blacks, Latins and Native Americans to the de- struction of women’s freedoms and the demonization of Black history, from the nev- er-ending crisis to multiplying climate-related dis- asters, up to famine, from the slaughter of Ukrainians to the normalization of daily mass murders in the U.S.

The word of the day for the pundit- ry is “rallying.” Gatherings like the World Economic Fo- rum in Davos, Switzerland, is “poly- crisis” — blandly de- scribed as a con-fluence of three or more interesting extreme risks, as if it were not the end of civilization itself that has been put in question?

Response, ruling classes across the globe have split into two main factions with differing strategies for heading off the threatened transformation from below: counter-revolution spewing new flavors of fascism with rough new figureheads, or non-transformational trans- formation to patch up the status quo while saving the powers that be.

I. Fascism, 2023 style

The diverse ways that fascist tendencies are taking hold in numerous countries across the globe barely ob- scures their common motivations and direction. Let us take the U.S. as an example, though not yet as ripe as Putin’s Russia, Modi’s India or Orban’s Hungary.

ATTACK ON ABDICATION AIDS FASCISM

The half-century attack on abortion has been cen- tral to the dismantling of democracy and the gos- tation of fascist currents. The anti-abortion movement gave impetus to the stacking of the judiciary with reactionary ideologues eager to bring the theology into law with little basis in the Constitution or legislation. Last year that culminated in one of the most regretful Supreme Court decisions in decades, Dobbs v. Jackson, which overturned Roe v. Wade.

Immediately, state legislatures began pushing—and often passing—the most extreme abortion bans, knowing full well that they were violating the majority’s wishes. Tens of millions of women, as well as Trans men and non- binary people, found themselves in states where hospitals might withhold abortion even when necessary to save the patient’s life or prevent serious, permanent damage to their health. Only the growing backlash prevented pas-
Save democracy, save abortion

by Terry Moon

Republicans and their ob- nuscous sponsors have to destroy democracy if they want to control what people do or don’t want to rule. A robust majority of the U.S. population supports legal, accessible abortion, are for gay rights and don’t despise Trans people. So how do you trash the rights of women, gays, Trans people, reinstate back-breaking child labor, attack the real history of op- pressed women who have been discriminated against? It’s all about defeating U.S. democracy, by destroying a government by the people and for the people.

MEDICAL MURDERING, DESTROYING DEMOCRACY

Republicans are at this with their extreme gerrymandering, destruction of the Voting Rights Act and ongoing voter suppression. But the U.S. Supreme Court’s overturning of Roe v. Wade gave them tremendous power in developing new ways to destroy a democracy. How_deviceyourself a right to an abortion help them? Let us count the ways.

1. First, and most tragically, is declaring women less than human by stripping us of the ability to control what is happening to our bodies. That makes our pregnant bodies and selves now belong to the state. Republican state governors and legislators, walloping pigs at a trough, are using their new-found power to force their property, i.e., women and others who may become pregnant, to do things they already don’t want to do. Carrying a doomed fetus until it dies and its dead flesh sickens a woman so severely that she too may die. And in Tennessee, where because their abortion is legal, there are no exceptions—including for a woman’s life.

2. Carrying a fetus that will die within minutes or hours after it is born, and most often because of incapacitating violence…where no woman or girl is forgotten. MWR holds an alternative White Ribbon. Furthermore, Wyomings Republicans want to “allow the legislature to make declarations interpreting the Wyoming constitution for whatever purpose they want.” Valenti’s words, the “bill would also strip state funding for life-saving abortions.”

3. They are aggressively going after ballot measures. In the six states where abortion was on the ballot—more than seven times as many as represent the people who elected them, the GOP in Ohio, Arkansas, South Dakota and Missouri wanted to stack the deck against the voters.

Ohio Republicans are trying to raise the threshold on passing amendments to the state’s Constitution from 50% to 57%.

4. Furthermore, Republicans want to link a proposed amendment declaring that people have the right to make their own reproductive decisions and prohibiting the state from interfering. Missouri too tried to raise the threshold from 50% to 57%.

5. In Arkansas, Sanders signed legislation that made those wanting to place an initiative on the ballot collect signatures from 50 of the state’s 75 counties when it previously was 15 counties. This is after failing to impose a supermajority threshold for adopting constitutional amendments and ballot initiatives, somehow.

6. Failing there, South Dakota’s “banned petitioners from gathering signatures for ballot initiatives,” according to an online news source. And Galva in the state of South Dakota under the state constitution for health, says “voter suppression and another attack on the democratic process.” Republicans in Missouri have taken the easy road of just by claiming that “restoring abortion rights would not be the same as public health. The actual cost estimated by the state auditor? $851,000.

7. ABC News reports that state legislators introduced 240 bills in their efforts to disenfranchise their citizens. Twelve have passed so far. State Constitutions are now fair game. If Republican legislators don’t like them, they give themselves the right to change them, at once and the same time, stripping that right from voters.

8. Effective in December, a violent projector attack is on the crosshairs if they decide to follow the will of the voters and not go after those who have abortions. That’s why 152 public state Attorney Generals want the right to remove them from office. Texas wants to fine them for not prosecuting abortion cases. Florida’s fascistical Delattino is now—as is Andrew Young Valenti for declaring that he would ignore abortion cases. Any woman can travel across state lines for an abortion, starting by taking everything, taking a minor across state lines for an abortion without consent from their parents, she could face felony charges. They’ve made up a “crime” and given it the outrageous name of “abortion trafficking.” While confined to minors—for now the women and girls in Texas are able to travel to states where abortion is legal.

9. MWR is run by Black women and girls, who have historically experienced a better taste of fascism are women, and others who can become pregnant. However you may define it, it is fascism when someone else in Texas makes you pay for your money. We can end male violence. “Women and Girls are Not for Sale.” “Women are Not the Problem,” “Stop Killing Us,” “Can End Male Violence,” “Women and Girls are Not for Sale,” “Women and Girls are Not for Sale.”

10. Forcing women and others to commit a pregnancy they do not want because of economic pressure; their determination to make a better life for the children they already have; their wrapped up in the mean-spirited, extreme cruelty abortion bans sweeping the USA. Stopping the overturning of Roe v. Wade is the number one goal. What does it mean to “defeat the political class” at the same time? It means legislator, stated, “women in our societies are hos- tage to the head and neck exam to assess any signs of strangulation. The Strangulation Clinic opened be-

The courage of #MeToo

It is status quo for police, judges and the general public, to doubt women’s accusations of abuse by men. (And yes, I know abuses can happen the other way around too, but real data on rapes and murders indicate more occurrences and greater damage done to women by men than the other way around. And you don’t have to tell me that same-sex abuses happen too, but let’s look at this situation for now.)

This is a situation that is humilating, and a losing battle, to accuse someone of abuse or rape. Naturally, it’s important to listen to accusations with objectivity, and some amount of skepticism, to be on the side of truth and fairness. But the idea that women are seeking money or are commonly lied about partner violence and sexual abuse, is a myth.

Fraudulent accusations are rare, and assaults are vastly underreported. Women realize that it is a gamble to call on a patriarchal institution for protection from abuse by a man. Women normally expect to be ignored or scorned.

Risks of Reporting

Reporting abuse can be dangerous in multiple ways, some women are, according to the same politary, “Victim/Suspect.” Entitled beings are vulnerable, and may successfully run the life of the accuser—and may be killed. The military’s slaughter of a people not considered “local” after centuries of residence in Burma is what had driven half the Rohingyas to flee to refugee camps in neighboring Bangladesh and beyond. Many others risk life and lose. A new wave of over 100,000 mostly Rohingyas had been killed as the storm hit with 120-mile-per-hour winds. But it was not a natural disaster.

Marx’s critique of Hegel, and dialectics of organization and philosophy

Hegel lives in an alienated world (and as a philosopher is the most alienated of all individuals) and uses the philosopher as the yardstick, nevertheless Hegel does not take this last step—heroism—but “arrives at an essence which is very opposite, i.e., Nature” (p. 353).

Stop. Do you realize how great that is? What a leap? It is not only not only the breaking-off of the 1844 Manuscripts, clearly Marx never was the writer that he and so many think him to be. The fact that he certainly did help all, including Marx himself, and that he has declared him to be “the one who has a serious, critical, relation to the Hegelian Dialectic” (p. 340). The truth is that high commerce is being in the abstract sense of the word, and that it is a fact that he certainly did help all, including Marx himself when they were younger, not to be so overwhelmed with Hegel as to immediately go with hammer and tongs at religion.

The fact that at once Marx called attention to negation of the negation not only from a Hegel’s point of view, but also healthy a hint that he was going to have something very sharp against Feuerbach, even though at the beginning more or less citable to that substance of the interpreted negation of the negation.

That fact comes to the point that he singles out Phenomenology, though that does not appear in the title and the praise of Feuerbach as well as his own critique means to be aimed directly at the system itself and not only when he wrote the word “inhuman”. What is regarded as the essence of alienation, mystification, pretensions of reality, philosopher as the yardstick, is attacked mercilessly and that when he uses the word “inhuman”. What is regarded as the essence of alienation, which is posed and to be transcended, is not for the sake of idealization, but for the purpose of an inhuman manner in opposition to itself, but the fact that it materializes itself from and in opposition to, abstract thinking. Hence, despite its thoroughly negative and critical character, and despite the criticism actually contained in it, which often far surpasses the later developments, there is already in the Phenomenology, hidden in every criticism of Hegel, the dialectical criticism and from the other side, the critical positivism and equally uncorrect ideality of the later Hegelian works—philosophic disintegration and resurrecting historicism.

Marx continued with his very sharp critique of the double error in Hegel, this time showing inhumanity also in spirit. It is the spirit of the same sort, which talks about sensuous consciousness in so abstract a way that the thing that is the spirit of sensuous consciousness, but just sensuous consciousness in itself, and therefore cannot get to “true human actuality” [...] that is, the German Idealism.

This, however, is followed with the fact that hidden in alienism, not an abstraction, but the alienation of man, even to the knowledge of Hegel’s spirit, and so that “all, elements of criticism lie hidden in it and are often already prepared and worked out in a manner extending far beyond the Hegelian standpoint... and, of course, that’s where Marx points to the greatest of all merits of Hegel, the dialectic of negativity” (p. 344).

By then proceeding at once to Absolute Knowledge, he is actually, even when talking of that last chapter in Phenomenology, having in mind the whole Encyclopedia. Marx can do that because the opposition to Thingness, to externalization, actually encompasses also Nature, with the result that “all, elements of criticism lie hidden not only, as nature such as—man is human nature—which is made subject.” (p. 347) Marx continues even in this materialized self-consciousness. Whereupon Marx is counterposing the truth instead of the mystifying that Hegel presents with the words of his own...

“We see here how the thoroughgoing naturalism, or Humanism, distinguishes itself both from Idealism and materialism, and as such, as an absolute and comprehending both. We see, at the same time, how only Naturalism is capable of grasping the act of world history” (p. 347).

The fact that the negation of the negation is needed because of this mystification, and because the whole problem is with the question of knowledge. He continues: “All, elements of criticism lie hidden not only, as nature such as—man is human nature—which is made subject.” (p. 347) Marx continues even in this materialized self-consciousness. Once again, however, just when Marx reaches the highest point of criticism of Hegel, it is when he singles out the greatest real thing in Hegel’s method and from it as the question of “transcendence, as objective movement, withdrawing and becoming expressed in alienation...” (p. 352). And of course this is the question we always rely on because it includes not only the question of the idealistic trans- mission, and ends with only then “does there arise positive Humanism, beginning from itself” (p. 352).

Marx’s break is not only a break with Absolute Mind, para. 384. “The Absolute Spirit is: this is the high- est definitiveness of the self” (p. 356). That time, August (1844) is approximately when he met Engels and, whatever he told Engels of this manuscript, the decision of both was not only to go beyond the Hegelian standpoint, but also to...
People with disabilities make up 15% of the population. They are in every country and culture on earth. Some disabilities are obvious, such as blindness or a wheelchair, while others are mental and harder to detect, like autism. Some people are born different and live with what is called disability their whole lives. Others develop it over time whether through disease, accident, or war injury.

One’s experience of being disabled is influenced by age, class, society, gender, race, sexual orientation, religion, how supportive and understanding friends and family are, etc. One thing that unites the disabled is that capitalism is a world not made for us, and communism is the only way to establish true freedom and equality for everyone.

People with disabilities are hired less often. The goal of the capitalist bourgeoisie is to make as high a profit as possible. One way this is done is by lowering costs, which is why bosses don’t like paying a living wage.

People with disabilities not only need a living wage, but may also need special accommodations. For example, a blind person may need braille; some wheelchair users require ramps and elevators; a deaf person requires sign language courses in the workforce, etc. To the capitalist, all these accommodations are seen only as costs.

Obstacles to hiring

A society where profit is the goal is rigged against the disabled. In addition, capitalism is dehumanizing.

People with ADHD, trauma, autism and other neurodivergent conditions receiving an appropriate education. A tidy history lesson

Our story hasn’t been taught, and few have the ability to write it. We need a school system that is aware of the original victims of the Holocaust, or that Russia denied it had disabled people. Here we are taught of the simple heroes who fight a good fight. It is high time schools teach about the 504 sit-in and the blocking of Madison Avenue and that people chained themselves to buses so they had to go. We continue to struggle.

Just as the Civil Rights Act didn’t end systemic racism, the Americans with Disabilities Act didn’t end systemic discrimination against the disabled.

We have to fight for ourselves, the state, corporations, religious organizations are not our friends. Neither are Republicans or Democrats. They have always been our oppressors. We must carry our flag of self-reliance, write our history, rise up, and strike, and protest.

Only we have the keys to our future, only we can be the dawn of a new order for ourselves. We have the power to break down the capitalist structure to create a new world. The flame of revolution burns passionately in our hearts. There is no revolution, there is no Marxism without the participation and support of all the communities of the world (including those designated as disabled) Unite! —Eric H.
VIOLENCE AND RACISM

American civilization on trial in terms of democracy and freedom. Second, Dunayevskaya and News and Letters Committees created some historical categories, among them: the American roots of Marxism as seen in Marx’s relationship with the Abolitionists and the Civil War, his writing of Capital, the vanguard nature of the Black movement in the U.S., the intertwinement of Black and labor in American development. I appreciated the timeline of events: the identification of lynching (and tens of many) others trying to bury the teaching of Black history in schools. I used American Civilization on Trial to get the Freedom School I participated in during the 1964 Mississippi Summer Project. It could be used today where, despite great recent scholarship and writings by Black scholars and man, there is little discussion of Black and Red (Black Liberation and Marx’s Marxism) and their needed unity as we struggle for social transformation.

CRITICAL RACE THEORY

Critical Race Theory tries to explain why Black people got the boot and the leap. For example: the difference in punishment between crack and cocaine criminals. Critical distinction (of race, class, etc.) would be banned as “Critical Race Theory.” I’m fighting a new kind of “battle of ideas” against a perversion of ideas for political purpose. Social media feeds this specifically and that is a battle against social media. Noise, irrelevant of content, builds on people’s emotions. Abstraction doesn’t promote critical thinking. But that’s exactly what the book-burners want to get rid of.

Critical thinking and education

Another teacher gave me a sign: “Please be quiet, testing in progress,” to put up on my classroom door for ACCESS testing. Then she asked: When are we not testing? Standardized testing does not promote critical thinking, creativity, curiosity, problem-solving skills or letting students lead. Maybe in some private schools those qualities are nurtured, but even the overall system of education promotes those there is an explosion of strikers at Rutgers, Eastern Illinois, Chicago State, for a living wage. College students and now teaching Assistants are involved. College teachers also don’t have time to talk or counsel students. They are data counting instead, and most of the data concerned isn’t valuable.

REMEMBERING THE VIETNAM WAR

Recently in the “Today in History” column in the Battle Creek Enquirer (1993). The last U.S. combat troops left South Vietnam, ending America’s direct involvement in the Vietnam War. This was the only thing that I saw about it—nothing on CNN, network TV, etc. This is in contrast to 1955 and the 1959 anniversary of the end of World War II. I remember all the celebrations and the monumental monument that was erected in Washington, D.C. In WWII, the U.S. and its allies defeated the genocidal Nazis and Japanese imperialism. But in Vietnam, the U.S. curtailed genocide. To this day, again, in contrast to how the German and Japanese people came to terms with the atrocities that were committed in their name, the U.S. has never done that. Maybe it’s a good thing that there aren’t any parades celebrating this genocide. But the lessons of history are being ignored, and we are suffering the consequences. As Santayana said, “Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.”

SYRIA GENOCIDE WHITEWASHED

The Arab league reinstating Syrian president Bashar al-Assad’s fitna is too much for words. Assad is a monster. He slaughtered his own people, crushing a revolution that was liberating, benefiting the poor, leveling hospitals, schools, bus stops filled with children—you name it. And now there’s no retribution; he hasn’t done it all, including doing the damn thing in cities and using civilians as human shields, especially women and children. The slaughter continues even now. Oman, the United Arab Emirates, and Jordan have shown how low they have fallen that they are willing to partner with such a monster. There are no reasons—they are the little flip-ups that can turn a mass murderer into something other than what he is.

The anti-abortion movement is powered by a backlash against the gains made by the Women’s Liberation Movement in the Sixties. People have a desire to put them in what they see as women’s rightful subordinate place. That same kind of deference of women, where racism and sexism come into traditional gender roles is central to fascism— a fact overlooked in many debates about what fascism is.

Another facet of the campaign to lock everyone in their gender stereotypes is that it is part of a more widespread drive to control how people think, particularly how they think about their own lives. Another way of putting it is that the campaign is making it harder for people, especially women and non-binary people, to think about the reality we live in.

That anti-abortion movement is a part of what we see now. It is not really a thing of the Sixties, but rather a thing that is being brought to a head now. People are being told what to think and how to feel about their bodies and their relationships.

III. Forces for freedom in Ukraine

President Putin's war on Ukraine has completely changed the political geography of Europe and the world. The war has forced leftists to come to terms with the reality of the short-circuiting of revolutionary forces in East Europe and Russia. The Left is now forced to recognize the role of the US role than the determining role of the phi- 3. See "The Right to a Job of Their Choosing" and "Left Activ- sion of revolution is only the beginning of liberation struggles, not the end—is won, we must expect that new wars and revolutionary out- aires are right not to put off thinking about what happens next. 1. That had ramifications in the post-Soviet region, where the multiethnic revolts into an ethnic party, and in the aftermath in of the Arab Spring and the Syrian revolution. It is too easy to forget the profound depths and militancy of the search for freedom. The Left has always been, and is now, even more. 4. IV. The climate emergency and the need to transform reality

As much as Putin might have welcomed Xi Jinping’s March visit to Moscow to buttress a facade of interna- tional support for his war, their meeting was light on sub- stance. Putin marked the visit, which coincided with a decade earlier, when Russia and China together would vote in common cause against international sanctions. Putin seeks to shake up the world’s existing order. At the same time, China’s need for global markets and resources limits its ability to challenge Western dominance directly. Putin has indicated a willingness to ally with Russia on mutual grounds, as demonstrated by the Sputnik V vaccine deal. The defendant’s case is based entirely on assumptions about the owner’s motives and possible financial gain, not on any evidence presented. Putin’s move is to create a new power structure that destabilizes the West. The situation is complex, and any assessment of Putin’s motivations must consider the broader geopolitical landscape.

Despite Putin’s attempts to undermine the West, the response has shown resilience and unity. The West has imposed significant economic sanctions on Russia, while simultaneously providing humanitarian aid to Ukraine. The formation of The Group of Friends of Ukraine demonstrates the global consensus against Russia’s aggression. The West has also shown a willingness to support Ukraine’s defense efforts through military and financial aid. These actions underscore the determination of the international community to uphold the principles of international law and territorial integrity.

The scenario of a unified Russia tumors and ordinary citizens of Ukraine are fighting for their social and labor rights, as well as for a society free from discrimination and oppression. The people of Ukraine have shown remarkable resilience and courage in the face of invasion and occupation. Despite the challenges, there is a sense of hope and determination among the populations. The struggle for freedom and self-determination continues, and the world is watching with support and solidarity.

Biden is playing his part. His State of the Union this year echoed that he took on Big Oil, human emissions of carbon dioxide, methane, and nitrous oxide... One of them is that the U.S. government should take the lead in reducing its greenhouse gas emissions. The U.S. government has set a target of reducing its emissions by 40% by 2030. This target is in line with the Paris Agreement, which aims to limit global warming to well below 2 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels. The U.S. government is also working on transitioning to renewable energy sources and improving energy efficiency. Biden's administration has taken a number of steps to address climate change, including the establishment of the National Climate Task Force and the passage of the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act, which includes significant investments in clean energy infrastructure. The U.S. government is also working to improve international cooperation on climate change, including through the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) and the Paris Agreement. The U.S. government has also been working to promote clean energy technologies and to support countries in developing and implementing their own climate action plans.
Polycrisis and the need to transform reality

V. Revolt is global

Revolt against rulers’ skewed efforts to transform reality is global, opposing both fascism, which itself is the alternative to the disintegrating status quo, and the “return to normal” that markets itself as the only alternative to the disintegrating status quo, falsely pose as the “revolutionary” solution—especially in the Global South.

A. Challenging Israel’s semi-democracy

The extreme right-wing coalition government that Israel’s Prime Minister Netanyahu assembled at the end of 2022, which continued until the March 2023 election, had many potentially explosive elements: a real, albeit limited, form of protest—Wallow project detail—detailed the harshness to their community and environment—in particular, the violence to protect the infrastructure of the fossil fuel Industry—has been biased from the start toward approving the project and/or leadership.

The political existence of Marxist-Humanist organizations is in constant contradiction between two forces: the need for a struggle against abstract, ideological, and even transformative organization by themselves cannot ensure the possibility of a blueprint for the new society, as if that is what Marx’s Critique of the Gotha Program means. On the contrary, what is meant for the project is a movement that is not linked to the power of the state, but still dangerous, a contemporary phenomenon as much of the U.S. and European Left entering into flouting, a Red-Brown alliance.

The organizational existence of Marxist-Humanists began with a critique of the theory and adoption of a decentralized committee form. That, however, is not all there is to it. Committee form, like any “mechanical” formula for organizing power to lead, is not its absolute opposite (just as spontaneous action and organization from below is not its absolute opposite to authority). Discussion on dialectics of organization and philosophy returned to the question of the absolute with the slogan “not only the new relations of theory to practice, and all the forces of revolution, but philosophy’s ‘suffering patience, even to the point of negative,’ i.e., experiencing absolute negativity.”

Where the vanguard party concept once dominated post-World War II Europe, semi-democratic parties are more prominent in recent decades. Horizontalism came out of factory occupations and popular assemblies in the 20th Century. And yet history shows that these forms of organization by themselves cannot ensure the possibility of a blueprint for the new society, as if that is what Marx’s Critique of the Gotha Program means. On the contrary, what is meant for the movement is a movement that is not linked to the power of the state, but still dangerous, a contemporary phenomenon as much of the U.S. and European Left entering into flouting, a Red-Brown alliance.

B. Women’s revolution in Iran

Women’s revolt has shaken Iran since the moral- ity police murdered 22-year-old Jina (Mahsa) Amini last September. The most important thing about the women’s revolution was that the idea that held that the country could never be the same. The rulers feel the threat so deeply that they denied that the government was behind it. Add- ing to the confusion was the fact that the many different policy-making- militaristic organs that make up the “riot” Special Unit to the Islamic Revolu- tionary Guard Corps— that the leadership is so efficient that it is unlikely that they would have allowed their way out who is mass poll- ings school girls un- leashing dreams for themselves.

While the government threatened to shut down business- ness that does not conform to the new codes on women— as women are still regularly defying draconian decrees to cover their hair—many establishments find defying the government’s threat is actually good for business. Thus, the revolt continues.

C. France’s massive worker- student protests

Over the past few months France has exploded in mass protests, demonstrations, and strikes against a so- cially repressive reform which will force workers to work two additional years, to the age of 64, to receive their pension. This follows on the heels of the 1968 protests which saw the retirement age from 60 to 62. So massive and continuous have been the demonstrations against President Macron and his government that the protests have been named the May-June 1968 protests that shook French society.

Over several weeks there was a unity of all the major trade unions to organize walkouts and strikes. Workers in transportation and many indus- tries, as well as farmers of the Peasant Con- federation, have been joined by students from the high schools and the universities blockading and occupying their institutions. These demonstrations have not been limited to Paris, always the center of France’s long history of revolt, but have been occurring in most of the country’s major cities.

Protesters were of all ages and occupations, with many joining in their very first demonstra- tions on short notice. The contrast in the age of the majority of the French people are the opinionators’ faces.

This did not stop the arrogant Macron, who realized he could not get a majority in the National Assembly, and therefore imposed the law by decree. This has in turn further infuriated the population.

Mass DEMOCRACY FROM BELOW

We are witnessing an important struggle: Bourgeois democracy is being challenged by a massive mass democracy from below, in the streets. That democracy is not the left’s particular form of democracy, but is a popular movement which is difficult to contain.

The paramount question for our tasks this year is how

As long-time Israeli activist Gila Svirsky put it recently: “If this [the recent demonstrations against the Israeli government] is a sign of a genuine renewal of the ground, a real good news—massive public rejection of anti-democratic behavior— I’ll tell you what is missing from it: an understanding that the occupation of Palestinian land and the five million Palestinians who live there are not a problem, but are deeply anti-democratic as any evisceration of the Supreme Court. In fact, probably more.

However, 25,000 women can actually listen to Palestinian women protest in Israel

More than 25,000 women dressed in red cloaks and carrying white flags formed a chain of protest in 70 locations across Israel on March 8, combining the commemoration of International Women’s Day with the wave of protests against the government’s proposed laws to turn Israel into a theocratic dictatorship.

Capitalism profits off immigrants’ woes

For three years, a COVID-emergency provision referred to in shorthand as Title 42 was in force. It required asylum seekers to wait in Mexico until their asylum hearing appointment. Normally, when refugees first arrive at a U.S. port of entry to claim asylum depending on certain factors, it was possible they would be released on their own recognizance to await a hearing date.

TRUMP AND BIDEN: NO MAN IN MIGRANT IMPOSITION

But Trump and his legalists, White House advisor Stephen Miller used the official designation to institute Title 42 in 2020, then tasked U.S. border agents with guarding the bridges on the Mexican side, so that people could not reach a port of entry without an appointment. (President Obrador’s government in Mexico tactfully facilitated this setup.)

Backlogs grew day after day, until asylum seekers could expect to wait six months or more for an appointment. Meanwhile, they added to the population of overwhelmed shelters and tent cities springing up along the U.S. border in Mexico, and so on. The system was functional, where they were preyed on by rapists, kidnappers and other criminals.

President Biden, who finally signed the Anti-Homosexuality Bill 2023, which includes the death penalty, after holding out for language about protecting persons, including LGBTQ persons, who will have been on strike for a month as of June 2. In 2022, Warner Brothers, a man whose salary over one year exceeded the sum of raises demanded by his 11,000 writers, stated that most asylum cases progress, how strictly Biden’s new policy will be enforced. HUMAN RIGHTS TAKE SECOND PLACE

It is still unclear how strict Biden’s new policy will be enforced. Some migrants expect to be deported to their home country or the nearest country with an asylum hearing appointment.

In his first year as president, Biden dragged his feet on reversing Title 42, long enough for a conservative federal judge to issue a court injunction. This arguably prevented any reversal. Eventually the legal battle was settled on July 19, 2023.

Sudanese killed by feuding generals

by Eugene Walker

Two Sudanese generals—Abdel Fattah al-Burhan and his Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) on one side and Mohammed Hamdan Dagalo, “Hemedti,” with his militia, known as the RSF (Rapid Support Forces) on the other—have been fighting their soldiers against each other for control of the capi- tal, Khartoum, making the city’s masses fair game for looting and wanton violence, the fighting erupted on April 16, thousands upon thousands of people have been displaced in the generals’ struggle to rule the country.

This is not the first time that they have used that amount of violence to murder and terrorize Sudan’s people. Both were participants in the Sudanese military, the former the country’s acting head of state, the latter is a member of the Country’s military intelligence. Hemedti played a leading role in the genocide in the Darfur region, where his militia slaughtered thousands, not to be deterred, promptly issued a new declaration of independence and economic nationalism. But they kept working to suppress. In the months since the October 2021 coup, and even more so with the outbreak of fighting this past April, the various international- ly mandated small powers and larger, including the United States and the United Arab Emirates, have focused their efforts on the two generals and their armies.

Several hundred thousand have been killed and hundreds of thousands of people have been displaced in the generals’ struggle to rule the country. Now the Sudanese masses resist both. The two generals are vying for power, but the political-economic structure in power.

Turkey’s election

Turkey’s President, Recep Tayyip Erdogan, after 20 years in power, was defeated in the June 12 vote by the CHP, the main opposition party run by Kemal Kılıçdaroğlu, in a landslide. Erdogan, who ruled Sudan with a mailed fist for three decades, Joshua Craze wrote in the New Left Review: “Each of these forces been building a popular movement against the rot-

CITIZENS SAY NO TO OUTSIDE INTERVENTION

Since the July 2021 assassination of President Jovenel Moïse, gang activity has escalated and gangs are now extorting, raping, and killing across the country and some 200 affiliated groups. While the UN Security Council has called for an end to outside intervention, previous experiences with foreign intervention make many Haitians doubtful about such a solution.

New residents in scattered neighborhoods are taking the situation into their own hands. In the Canape Vert neighborhood, residents captured 13 suspected gang members that the police held, beat and hanged them to death, as well as set their bodies on fire.

President Lopez Obrador and the Armed Forces

Mexico’s President keeps developing a closer relationship with the army and navy. This, despite strong evidence of their involvement in extrajudicial murders and illegal spying. Most recently he has put the Guardia National under the control of the army. The CDI (Institution for the Promotion of Democracy) has criticized him for his continued interference with the military and has called for him to be held accountable for his actions.

Crisis in the Crisis

The current crisis in the political and economic situation in Mexico is a result of the deepening of the country’s social and economic crisis, the ongoing internal conflict between different groups, and the international pressure on Mexico to make concessions to its neoliberal policies. The current government of Lopez Obrador has been criticized for its lack of action in addressing the root causes of the crisis, and for its failure to make the necessary changes to address the structural problems that are driving the crisis. The current situation in Mexico is characterized by a lack of political stability, economic hardship, and social unrest. The government has taken steps to address some of these issues, but the overall situation remains challenging.
